A Commentary On The Paris

Paris Commentary. John Train Issue 1, Spring 1953. The golden age of the expatriate literary life is already well past, there seems no getting around it, although like most golden ages it may never have existed and be simply a useful myth, a theme of conversation and art. Certainly the sympathetic enthusiasts of Mürger and du Marnier, and even ...

Last week, The Paris News carried a story I wrote about Paris High School graduate D.J. Pierce and his involvement in an HBO series that was recently nominated for an Emmy Award. As part of that story I had originally included a paragraph or two about Pierce's reaction to the death last month of another former Paris resident, Ash Christian.
